What is Reframing?

- Reframing is a psychological technique that consists of identifying and then changing the way situations and emotions are viewed.
- It is a process by which thoughts are challenged and then changed.
- Reframing helps to manage negative thoughts and worries.
- It can also help us feel more able to deal with stress and anxiety.
ARE NEGATIVE THOUGHTS NORMAL?

The problem arises when we believe our thoughts are true.

80 percent of thoughts are negative.

What is Worry?

- Worry occurs when we find ourselves dwelling on negative thoughts or things that could go wrong.
- It is all about our cognitive response.
- It has an important function and can help us to problem solve.
- It becomes an issue when we get stuck in a worry rut, where it can lead to stress and anxiety.
Your Worries

- Think about the things that you have worried about lately?
- Did it help you to take action?
- Did you find yourself ruminating or obsessing over the same worries, without it leading to change?

Dealing With Negative Thoughts

Automatic negative thoughts, or ANTs, are generated in the face of stress. They influence emotions and distort our perception of reality in a negative way. These thoughts are difficult to recognize because they are fleeting and habitual.
Common ANTRelated to the Pandemic
- My family is going to get sick and die.
- I am going to lose my job and my home.
- Things will never get better.
- The children will never recover from the trauma.
- I can't exercise because the gyms are shut.
- The economy will never recover.
- I should be able to cope better than this.
- My children's future is ruined due to their disrupted education.

Tackling ANT

1) Become aware of your ANT
2) Challenge the ANT
3) Make it a PET

Example:
ANT: My children's future is ruined due to their disrupted education.
PET: My children have adapted well to the changes and learning virtually. I will take this opportunity to help them develop additional life skills that will help them in the future.

Shifting Your Mindset

- Once we accept our circumstance for what they are, we can shift our entire perspective.
- It is possible to redirect the focus and reframe the situation to consider what can done, rather than what can't.
- This helps to develop a plan and strategy for tackling the situation, focusing on internal change.
